Lansdale, PA – September 15, 2009 - The Lansdale Center for the Performing Arts (LCPA), a non-profit organization providing the communities of Bucks, Montgomery and Philadelphia counties access to performing and visual arts and arts education, announces the opening of their inaugural 2009/2010 performance season. The opening night festivities will begin on Friday, September 25th with a reception followed by the season's kick-off performance from the Chamber Orchestra of Philadelphia at 7:30 p.m.

The LCPA also announces its 2009/2010 performance line-up. The entire season will be comprised of eight exciting themes full of diverse performances ranging from music, theater and comedy to literature and film -- all joined by a common theme. The first series, named "Out of This World," is a grouping of eclectic programs – everything from classical orchestra performances to comedy to a psychic demonstration – all of which uniquely interpret this same theme. Examples of additional themes this season include "Fountain of Youth," and "Animal Madness." The "Out of This World" series runs through October 18, 2009.

"We couldn't be more thrilled to host the Chamber Orchestra of Philadelphia for our organization's opening night," said Marja Kaisla, executive director of the Lansdale Center for the Performing Arts. "This first performance will kick-off a season of incredible national and regional talent offering something for everyone living within our region's communities."

The LCPA's opening weekend will continue through Saturday, September 26th at 7:30 p.m. with a performance by three-time Addie Award winning comedic actress Tammy Pescatelli. Pescatelli is most recently known for receiving the top spot on NBC's Last Comic Standing.
